Philosophy and Approach:

I take a person-centered approach where I offer non-judgemental and compassionate responses to clients. I aim to help clients understand the root of their emotions and behaviors, and to provide coping tools to help clients function healthily in their daily lives. I believe in person-first therapy, and I strive to get to know each client on a personal level and to provide individualized care. I utilize various modalities depending on the clients needs, whether that consists of a more cognitive-behavioral approach, or a relational and attachment-centered approach.

Formal Education:

I received my Masters of Science in Marriage and Family Therapy from the Rossier School of Education at the University of Southern California.

Major Coursework Description:

My degree focused on a relational approach to symptomology and treatment of psychological disorders, emphasizing that people do not exist within a vacuum but rather as part of systems and communities. I received training in individual, family, group, and couples therapy, with an emphasis on social justice and a culturally sensitive approach.

Fees:

Children's Program charges $230 per initial consultation, $205 per therapy session, and a $100 cancellation or no-show fee for my services
